Among those factors analyzed were renewable energy, cleaner air, greater park space, and a more compact physical footprint, according to the company’s news release.

“We are especially proud to be selected as Mississippi’s Greenest City this year, when you consider that we are also the “breadbasket” of our state, with a lot of industry and business,” said Mayor Dane Maxwell.

“This is a recognition we share with residents and our corporate citizens. We are all partners in the commitment to drive green and live green,” he said.
